MEDIATION/FACILITATION STYLE

After many years of litigation experience in business and commercial fields, I have come to a resolution that rarely, when a dispute arises, litigation is the best answer. That's why I am a big fan of mediation. Mediation is everything that litigation is not. The basic concepts underlying mediation process -- communication, negotiation, facilitation, and problem solving -- emphasize the principals of self-determination of the parties, the needs and interest of the parties, fairness, procedural flexibility, confidentiality, and full disclosure. When was the last time you've heard of utilizing such principles in litigation. During mediations, I explore these principles to the fullest to encourage open communications between both sides with a view of exploring novel solutions to their problem. I help parties to move away from their fixed positions and encourage them to truly see the other side's interests. The result is the settlement that it is more likely to be enforced and the relationship between the two parties to be maintained, not to mention the advantages of the time and money that is saved.

SUMMARY OF MEDIATION EXPERIENCE

I have extensive legal, business, and mediation experience in a wide variety of commercial matters including Corporate, Construction, Bankruptcy, Consumer, Professional Liability, Probate, Administrative and Regulatory, Associations (HOA and Condo) and other commercial matters. Beginning with the implementation of the managed foreclosure mediation program in the 11th and the 19th Judicial Circuits in May of last year, the primary focus of my mediation practice has been on foreclosures, loan modifications, refinance programs, and other work out options that are rarely explored in the managed mediation settings.
